Description

Lviv. Former Dominican Church and Korniakt Tower

This late baroque style church was built on the former site of a Gothic temple in 1749, by architect Jan de Witte - a project manager for the Kamyanets-Podilsky fortress. The church structure forms an elongated cross with an oval central part and two chapels on both sides, glorified by a huge elliptical dome. It has massive, paired columns that support the galleries and balconies decorated with wooden statues made by the Lviv sculptors in the second half of 18th century. Above the galleries, you can find drum columns that support the dome. Under the roof above the entrance of the church, there is a scripture in Latin from the first epistle of the apostle Paul to Timothy: "Soli Deo honor et gloria" ("Honor and praise to one God").

According to some researchers, the site of the modern temple used to be the palace of King Leo I. His wife Constancia was Catholic, so the King gifted her the chapel of Peter and Paul, which was in the palace.

Behind it, we see the tower of the belfry of the Assumption Church, built by the architect Peter Barbon with the participation of Paul Rymliany in 1572-1578, commissioned by Konstantyn Korniakt, who was a merchant of Greek origin living in Lviv at the time. On the tower, even before the completion of construction, a bell with a diameter of 2 meters, cast and installed by order of a merchant, which was called "Cyril".

It was here, at the Assumption Church, that the Lviv Assumption Brotherhood operated, the participants of which, made a significant contribution to the development of the Ukrainian culture, education, and the spiritual life.
